> Yehuda N. Falk (in preparation) "Hebrew Present-Tense Copula Constructions: The View From Parallel Syntax" available from the course website: `http://pluto.mscc.huji.ac.il/~msyfalk/StrucFunc/`

Write a short paper addressing the following issues:

- In LFG, structure and function are separated. How does the analysis in this paper draw on this distinction?

- In what way(s) is PRON noun-like? In what ways is it verb-like?

- In what way(s) is yeš noun-like? In what ways is it verb-like?

- How does Bresnan's theory of mixed categories help us analyze Hebrew copulas? In what sense can it be said that Hebrew present-tense copulas are atypical mixed categories?

- Do you find the analysis plausible? Why or why not?
